In the News

Meet Keri Potts

Syracuse University is where Keri Potts '98, G'99 learned to love communications and media, combined her education with her passion for sports, and laid the foundation for a gratifying career—not just a job. Today the former SU volleyball player has risen through ESPN's ranks to senior director of communications for college sports, and also finds time to make a difference in the Atlanta community and at SU. We're halfway there!

In 2013, the SU Alumni Club of Atlanta (SUACOA) and the Atlanta Regional Council launched the Georgia Scholars Fund to provide scholarships and financial assistance for SU's growing pool of Georgia applicants. They've made great strides so far, raising over $55,000 in gifts and pledges! The goal is to raise $100,000 by December, so the scholarship can be awarded in fall 2015. Read more, see who's given, and learn how you can join the effort.

SU student leads a dual life

Not only is communication and rhetorical studies major Courtnee Futch '15 a full-time student, she's also the CEO of ThunderCakes, a bakery she launched during her freshman year. Her desire to “bring the ‘A’ to SU”—combined with her love of baked goods and the need to supplement her college-student finances—resulted in the birth of her startup, which specializes in custom cakes, made-to-order baked goods, and event catering.
